

To: Individual business travelers

New Visa and Entry Requirements for Business Travelers to China

With China lifting its quarantine-upon-arrival requirement as part of its COVID-19 policy, interest in travel to China is soaring. Although the mandatory quarantine requirement has been dropped, business travel to China can still pose risks and challenges to corporate travel managers.

The guidelines below outline the changes to foreign national admissions to China and new visa issuance.

- All visas issued prior to March 2020 are currently suspended. This includes existing 5- and 10-year visas, even those with remaining validity.
- Currently, the government of China is granting visas for Business Travel (M visa), Work Permits (Z visa), Family Visit/Family Reunion visas, and some student visas. New tourism visas are not being issued at present time.
- If you are entering China you will need to present a negative PCR (nucleic acid test) taken no earlier than 48-hours prior to departure, along with a valid visa, or a reason for visa-free entry.
- Chinese consulates in Japan and South Korea have resumed issuing visas to Japanese and South Korean citizens to visit China.
- While visa issuance and processing times are fluid and changing, the government of China indicated it will work with its consulates to process visas in an expeditious manner. CIBT recommends you make sure to budget ample time for visa processing before your expected travel date.

Entry requirements to China are rapidly evolving. For up-to-date visa requirements please visit your corporation's dedicated travel portal, or visit the CIBT website. Additionally, CIBT's on-demand resources and webinars for travel to and from China can be found here.

What you need to do:

Discuss travel options with your travel managers.

For CIBT's on-demand resources and webinars for foreign national visitors to and from China please go to our China Reopening page. ©2023 CIBT, Inc.